The translation will be found a great help by foreign students of the Chinese Novelistic Style --It required, we im gine, no little courage and determination on the part of the Translator to at down to such a task as the translation even of the first book of the Hung Lou Meng. * * The translation has been most conscientiously done - Daily Press. One of the greatest works in Chinese Classical Fiction * * * To translate into Classical English a whole Chinese Novel is probably the most difficult work any linguist could undertake. Mr. Joly is to be highly complimented on his success - Hongkong Telegraph.

Mr. Joly deserves the congratulations of all students of Chinese Literature upon baving commenced an enterprise which many sinologues of higher standing have wanted the courage to ittempt.—Jopan Mail.

It was therefore not an uninterrupted time of peace during which the Empress Dowager presided over fortunes of the nation, and that the difficulties were smoothed away successfully must be recorded to her credit. She has now retired, nominally if not virtually, from the helm of state and resides in a palace built for her by her nephew in the grounds of the Summer Palace destroyed by the Allies, where for her entertainment and recreation electric ianuches have been placed on the lake. It is believed that she would dearly like to move a little more abroad and see for herself the foreigners of whose mysterious steamboats and other inventions she has heard so much and whose relations with the Flowery Kingdom have necessarily occupied so large a part of her attention. A most enjoyable dance was given in the City Hall on Thursday evening by the members of the Institute of Engineers and Shipbuilders. There was a large company, but at no time was the St. George's Hall inconveniently orowded, and from a dancer's point of view the gathering was almost ideal. Liberal hospitality was dispensed, card tables were provided, the festivity was kept up briskly until the "wee sme hours," and when "God Save the Queen" brought the function to a close a general hope be equally pleasant and successful.

Up to the commencement of the present year there had occurred the failure of no less than 40 building and financial associations in the cities of Melbourne and Sydney, with liability aggregating something like £25,000,000. and in the beginning of January of the present year some great banks of issue began to show tigns of w akness, of which the stoppage of the Federal Bank was the first decisively important indication. The Federal Bank closed its doors in January, and from that date up to the middle or the end of May, no less than 12 or 13 of the banks of issue in Australia were compelled to suspend payment with a liability aggregating very nearly £100,000,000. There are plenty of examples of the habit of Captala Marryatt, too, who modelled his style on these novelists, does not forget to copy this characteristic also. It will be remembered that Coloridge criticised Marryatt favourably, but, he added that the latter's novels would have been none the worse for a little less swearing. Plenty of characters, more or less foul-mouthed taken from these remances, at once occur to mind. First of all, there is that odd boatswain. Chucks, who is always lamonting that he is not born a gentleman. But his eddest peculiarity is that of beginning a sentence most politely, and ending it with foul language. Thus, to an erring sailor he will say, "Allow me to remark, in the politest manner in the world, that you are tad lective haymaking son of a seacook." Next there is that fat Dutch corporal of marines. who always ejaculates "forty tausond teffels." and as he grows more excited, increases the number of evil spirits' in a most alarming man ner; and there is also the captain, who said he wis always so civil and polite to his men. but who shocked rough sailors even, by his cruslty and obscenity of speech. There is an awasing story of Daniel O'Counell's 'adventuge with a fishwife, a class of person generally able to hold its own in wordy combats. It seems that the " liberator" got into a quarrel with the lady, who at once made use of full flavoured words. But she was a codily silenced and listoned horror-stricken to the strane of language sho had evoked. She was called "a horizontal parallax, an isosecles, parallelopiped, and a rejuven ated mas of unsymmetrical adolescence." - Sho was fairly crushed, and could only exclaim, "You fold sinner; aren't you afraid of the heavens fallling upon you?" In novels that profess to paint a mediaval period strange ouths abound. Haeri- w son Ainsworth is especially distinguished in this respect, and page after page teems with " slife." " sblood," " zounds," bdds pittikins, and "odds bodkins," &c. In fact, it is often deficult to find out what some strange expressions mean, such, for example, as "God's ligging" which is to be found in Shakespeare. We are not sware that men ever devoted themselves to devising new and strange outbursts; but in

Au-Italian or Spaniard is more limited—that is in novels; in real life he is botter provided with exple-"Corpo di Baco," or "Calamba." People are often shoked at hearing Frenchmen so friquent ly ejaculate " Mon Dieu; " but, if etymologists do not err, we in England say the same thing: every time we exclaim " Dear me," for this expression is said to be a corrupted form of "Dio Mio." In mediaval days it was the custom to swear largely by the names of various saints.
